[Concluded.] Here, then, was one of a new class of dodgers, who, finding many red dupes, managed to carry on a profitable business, ostensible dangerous, but in reality without incurring any rise of punishment. If one was a knave, the other was a dupe with a criminal intent, who had no claim to justice. He was only the biter bitten. The scheme of operation was as follows: The fellow goes about in like quarters, representing that he has a lot of counterfeit money can detect, and which he offers at a tempting Union Depot, Indianapolis, at 12:30 P. M. dally, for price. He generally operates upon beer-shop keepers, and a certain class of small tradesmen. He does not go to work blindly or at HAVE associated with me in business Mr. G. W. "Feels greasy, though." LL persons knowing themselves indebted to me will A please call at their earliest convenience and make "Yes, that one does, because I have been carrying it in my pocket with some coppers." The dupe, seeing plainly that the coin is a good one, thinks there will be little risk, and no harm in buying a lot of it; but continuing for baggage or omnthus at Madison. to profess his doubts, the knave proposes that | Tariff of Freights as low as by any other route. BROWNING & SLOAN, he shall send the coin to a neighboring gro- est to travel over and ship by this line. eer's or cheesemonger's, for half a pound of ap26-dtf. sugbr or butter. Of course, the coin being a good one, is readily taken, and the knave wins & deeper confidence at the cost of a few pounds worth at the price agreed upon. The knave then proceeds to urge the great risk he would run by carrying such a quantity of counterfeit money about his person. The Old Bailey for trial, it might go hard with he never carries more than one piece about of Drugs in reference to their purity. Our facilities are such that we feel confident we can offer, in purs and unhim. He must be careful. Therefore he appoints a meeting with the dupe in the suburbs, where he can see if he is watched. The All orders will receive the personal attention of one place of appointment is generally some unfinished villa or mansion, about Hampstead. Highgate, Clapham, &c. When the dupe artends his "friend" is concealed in the empty house with the "stuff." He coaxes the dupe Trains Arrive out of his money, and pretends to go into the house, leaving his victim waiting outside. BEST American and French Window Glass; 500 boxes Window assorted, from 8x10 to 36x60, in store and

The knave then cautiously proceeds round to the back of the house, but is no sooner out of his victim's sight, than he jumps over the fence and disappears, leaving the dupe to relish the trick as he best may.

I had no doubt that Jacob's bad customer and the tall fellow in the coffee house were one and the same person—a fellow who had been carrying on this game successfully for two or three years.

Next day, early in the evening, I proceed- Piano-Fortes. ed, in company with a brother officer, to Battersea Fields, where the countryman had made an appointment with the money-dealer. We fortunately succeeded in concealing ourselves unobserved in the very empty house where the knave had appointed to meet his dupe. As we knew very well that he had no intention of entering the house, we planted ourselves in some outhouses, one on each side of the house, so as to make sure of intercepting him. In due time, we saw both knave and dupe approach the house. Cautiously surveying the ground, and then proceeded to the gate entering upon the lawn, where a parley ensued. The countryman showed reluctance to part with his money, but finally seemed prevailed upon, and counted out his five sovereigns.

The knave was over the gate and into the grounds as quickly as a greyhound. He was so active in his movements, that although he Livery and Sale Stables came past close by where I was standing, he got the start of me, and was over the fence in the twinkling of an eye. I signaled by brother officer, who quickly rejoined me, and off we started in pursuit. A pretty long slwaysin readiness. Charges moderate, dec3-tf chase he led us. However, we finally cap-tured him, and lodged him in safe keeping at Wandsworth. Upon searching him, we found the five sovereigns he had obtained from the countryman, and two half crowns, one of Trains Arrive. which was counterfeit. Next day I called upon friend Jacob, and related my adventure to him. He was present at the fellow's first examination, and testified that he had passed a bad half-crown upon him. The knave was remanded.

Of course his examination was reported in the newspapers, and upon his next appearance in public there was a crowd of his dupes in the court, the countryman among the rest. But what could they say or do? They had engaged themselves in a criminal business, and had been bitten, caught in their own snare. Had they succeeded in obtaining the counterfeit money, they would have had no compunction in passing it off on any hard-working, honest man, a little the worse for drink. They could not, therefore, ask for sympathy or redress, and long before the examination was over, they had all disappeared

There was another plan, by the operation of which this knave succeeded in obtaining several sums of money from credulous people. He would seek out some hard-working man who had saved a little money, and getting into conversation with him, would pretend to commiserate his unfortunate position.

"You are a great fool," he would say, "to work like this, when you could do so much better?"

"Show me how, then." "Well, you see I am agent for a very large building society, and can get a trusty man a good situation of two hundred a year. Of course, I should expect something for myself, by way of commission." "How much?"

"Well, I think it is worth ten pounds." Well, I would not mind giving you that for
